Yes! she broke in, impatiently, but I want something quite fresh, not like Whistler, or Morris, or Tadema. It is so distinguished to express ones own personality in ones surroundings. Do you not mean other peoples personality said the Lay Figure, if you employ their ideas. Dont be flippant, she broke in. Of course another person may suggest an idea. Which any one is certain to ruin in translating it to shape, the Lay Figure added. My dear lady, anybody can have ideas; it is to carry them through that reveals the artist. Still, you might suggest something novel for my new drawing-room, she said. When I do not know its aspect, or its proportions, what furniture you are prepared to discard, or if you mean to keep the thousand and one bits of bric-a-brac from your present one. Oh! but every one is absolutely lovely, she replied. It is very rude of you to reflect upon my taste. People always say it is my strongest point. Of course! But if you express your own taste in bric-a-brac, and another persons in decoration, wont they clash The Lay Figure paused. Really, she said, hastily, if I am to choose nothing myself, the room would be hideous. You know novelists always say it is a woman who gives the indefinable touch to any room. I suspect indefinable touches, said the Lay Figure, calmly; no touch ought to be applied to a picture or a piano without...
